CHAPTER I INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background of the Activity

Translating business texts plays an important role in bridging the language and cultural gap between parties involved in business transactions. Translating business texts is not just about translating word for word, but also requires an in-depth understanding of business terminology, legal aspects, culture, and context that apply in the business world.

Business texts can include various documents such as contracts, agreements, financial statements, company presentations, marketing materials, and others. Accuracy and clarity in translation are needed to ensure that the message conveyed remains true to the original intent and does not lead to errors that could risk the smooth running of the business.

As the translation service industry, especially business-focused ones, grows, many companies require professional translators to ensure the quality of their communication in the international market. Therefore, practical knowledge and skills in translating business texts are essential for translators, especially in dealing with challenges related to language nuances, technical terms, and differences in legal systems and cultures. In this case, students need practical knowledge with Internships (PKL) activities before entering the professional world in order to add provisions and knowledge to become a translator.

This fieldwork is conducted to gain hands-on experience in translating business texts, as well as to develop competence in the field of translation. During this fieldwork practice, the author had the opportunity to be involved in the translation of various types of business documents and work closely with a team of experienced translators, which enabled the author to hone her translation skills and gain a deeper insight into professional translation standards and procedures.

The author had the opportunity to conduct fieldwork practice at Perkumpulan Maritim Muda Nusantara for four months. During the period, the author translated various types of texts, including business texts. Therefore, this report focuses on the process of translating business texts because the author has special expertise in this field and realizes that business translation is an interesting topic to discuss.

1.2 Scope of Activities

This report is prepared to describe the experience during the PKL activities at Perkumpulan Maritim Muda Nusantara. During the PKL, the author received various translation assignments such as news texts, articles, and business texts, and the author applied all that she had learned and her translation skills to these assignments. However, this report focuses on the process of translating articles in the Maritim Muda Nusantara Media website.

1.3 Time and Place of Implementation

The time and place of the PKL are as follows:

time : September 6, 2024 to December 31, 2024

CHAPTER IV CONCLUSION

4.1 Conclusion

The fieldwork practice carried out by the author gained valuable experience in applying theoretical knowledge of translation into daily practice. During the fieldwork, the author gained a deeper understanding of the complexity of the translation process, including challenges such as maintaining the original nuance and meaning in the target language. Through this fieldwork, the author also experienced the importance of flexibility and foresight in capturing the cultural and linguistic context of the translated text.

Translation is not only about language proficiency, but also about sensitivity to cultural differences and social conventions that affect the way of communication. The author learned that technical skills in using translation tools are also crucial in supporting the efficiency and quality of the final output. In addition, this practice provides an opportunity to adapt to different types of texts and genres, ranging from business texts to legal texts, all of which require different approaches in the translation process.

Overall, this fieldwork not only enriched the author's understanding of the translation profession, but also provided valuable insights into the challenges and opportunities within it. The author is confident that this experience will serve as a strong foundation in building a professional career in translation, with a commitment to continuously develop skills and knowledge to meet the changing demands of the industry.

4.2 Suggestions

After going through the internship process at Maritim Muda Nusantara, there are several things that the author notes to be suggestions for all parties involved in this internship process. The following are the points that the author gives as suggestions:

Get to know the Translation Specialization
Before starting fieldwork practice, it is necessary to understand the field of translation specialization, such as business, legal, or journalistic translation.

Hak Cipta :

© Hak Cipta milik Politeknik Negeri Jakarta

Having a basic knowledge of the terminology and language style in the field will be helpful in understanding the context of the material to be translated and improve the accuracy of the translation.

- 2. Maintain Professional Ethics and Confidentiality
 - During fieldwork practice, professionalism must be maintained when communicating with clients or superiors, including punctuality, responsiveness to feedback, and maintaining the confidentiality of the translated material. Especially in the translation of sensitive materials (e.g. legal or medical documents), maintaining confidentiality and adhering to the code of ethics is essential.
- 3. Ask for and Receive Feedback Openly
 - Fieldwork is an invaluable opportunity to learn and grow. Requesting feedback from mentors or supervisors on the quality of the translation should be done to correct any mistakes that may have occurred. Being open to constructive criticism can help improve your skills and overall understanding of translation.

By implementing these suggestions, it is hoped that fieldwork practice can provide a more meaningful experience for students, improve their skills, and prepare them to contribute effectively to organizational projects in the future.
