This study aims to examine and criticize the existence of ethics in the banking business. Bankers in conducting their duties can not be removed with ethics, and ethical theory as well as the work of evil in the basic theory. Therefore, it is expected to maintain moral ethics in their behavior. This research criticize and evaluate the implementation of ethics contained in the principles of good corporate governance in general. Target to be addressed is what are the things that cause a banker breaking, on the other hand there are bankers who obedient. This research using secondary data as initial data that led to the initial conclusion, and using primary data for comparison with the current situation that occurred (empirical). Study tries to fill this gap previous research related to the importance of ethics in business, which has been largely ignored by researchers, especially the science of criminology.

Keywords: Ethics, Control, Crime, Banking.

I. PREFACE

Crime in banking as part of economic crime. Economic crime is usually referred to as white-collar crime (white collar crime). Economic crime is a crime that has economic motives and usually done by people who have the intellectual ability and have an important position in society, and was related to his job.

Banking crimes, mostly carried out by the internal, in terms of criminological called white collar crime (white collar crime). Different modes to do with the mode of conventional crime, while the value of the object is very large theft (Wirjosukarto, 2012).

Banking crime is not merely a violation of regulations relating to banking, but there needs to be some things that lead to violations / crimes committed by bankers and bank officials, which is associated with his work and even his post. It was like proposed in the study, that some professional crime differs significantly from conventional crime. First, a professional criminal involved in the life of criminal behavior for the purpose of economic gain, or even as a livelihood. Second, highly developed professional career criminals. Third, in committing a crime, supported with sufficient professional skills. Fourth, professional criminals enjoy a high status in the community. And fifth, professional criminals are usually able to avoid detection and is quite successful in avoiding prison (Clinard-Quinney, 1972).

Of crime data bank above, shows that the banking crime, both in the government and private commercial banks, of which there are many cases, have considerable value for money, as well as most of the perpetrators were in or the bankers. These cases is not the first case (before the economic crisis of 1997), some time before the crime in the banking sector, which we know as the evil "white collar" has several times occurred for instance the case of BNI bank and others. To minimize and detect the occurrence of crime in the banking company, the company should focus on corporate governance based on a set of ethical principles that guide the company to make a decision or action. In addition, developing a corporate governance framework to reduce the risk and detection of fraud that might arise (Nabhan - Hindi, 2009).

Efforts to deter violations and bank fraud, Bank Indonesia has made a Rule of Good Corporate Governance, as well as ethical guidelines for commercial banks, issuing and Regulations on Test Fit and Proper Test (Fit and Proper Test) which is intended for prospective bank officials. Both regulations are closely related to behavioral and ethical issues, especially for bankers to run the bank's operations. A crime that occurred in banking, for it can be argued that the opinion Cressey (1968) pointed out that the crimes committed by them is related to the job, no breach of trust by the manager. There is a conflict between the role of a businessman with a role as a professional, as well as to rationalize their crimes. As in the above data, the figures showed that almost all bank crimes committed by those who have a position or authority for each task, such as director, branch manager, deputy director, head teller, supervisor, and so on. Of these conditions, the managers, are ideally before taking office have passed the fit and proper test and after that, in carrying out his duties the principles of corporate governance (GCG) as ethical.

II. THEORY

Ethics is the study of all things good and evil in human life, especially regarding the movements of thought and feeling which can be a consideration and feelings, in the form of its intention to act (Zubair, 1995). With ethics, humans are expected to behave in the absence of guidance, especially in their role, both as individuals and in society. Similarly, ethics is the science which deals with morality or a science that investigates moral behavior (Bertens, 2004). Ethics is a reflection of what is called "self control", because everything was built and applied from and to the interests of social groups (professional) itself. To get the same concept of the good and bad assessment for all human beings to an act in a group, space and time. In the business community, especially the banking business, the code of conduct has been defined as the Code of Conduct in business activities in the company (Code of Corporate and Business Conduct), an implementation of one of the principles of Good Corporate Governance.

Code of ethics, demanding the bankers to conduct ethical business practices are the best in all things done on behalf of the bank. If this principle is deeply embedded in the culture of the bank (bank culture), all bankers in the bank should try to understand and try to adhere to the "which should" and "which should not be" carried out in the banking business. Violation of the Code of Conduct is a serious matter, even be categorized as a violation of the law or the so-called crime. Therefore there is the aggrieved party, in this case is the loss of material.

III. BANKERS CODE

Bankers as one of a variety of professions, where they are incorporated into the business organization called the Bank. Profession into a group that has its own power and because it has a special responsibility, has a monopoly on a particular skill, so there is a danger of a profession that is closed to outsiders and themselves into a circle that is difficult to penetrate (Bertens, 2002). In the banking world are accepted and adhered to by the national bankers and then settles into a normative. Ethical banking is a good habit or regulations in the banking world are accepted and adhered to by the national bankers and then settles into a normative (Simorangkir, 1985). The existence of a code of conduct, attempted to compensate for the state, which is expected to memberbasar public trust in the professions. Similarly, in order to function properly the profession, it is necessary to create a code of ethics created by the professional community. From there it will be black and white set his intention to embody moral values are essential, which are not imposed from outside.

Every banker in Indonesia are required to manage the bank in a healthy respect for the norms and banking are applicable, comply with all the values as basic guidelines in determining attitudes and actions. Banking norms recognized, accepted and adhered to the Code of Conduct contained in the Indonesian Bankers in the contents as follows:

1. A banker comply with and obey the laws and regulations applicable regulations.
2. Keep records correct on all transactions related to bank activities.
3. Refrain from unfair competition.
4. Not misuse authority for personal benefit.
5. Refrain from involvement in the decision-making kepentingan.gambilan event of a conflict.
6. Maintain confidentiality of customer and bank.
7. Can take into account the impact of any policy set merugikandari bank against economic, social and environmental.

8. Not accept gifts or rewards that enrich themselves personally and their families, which themselves personally and their families.
9. Not committed a disgraceful act that could harm image of his profession .

METHODOLOGY

In obtaining the required data , it will perform the following phases: Library, Read the case files District Court or the Supreme Court , literature , scientific journals , articles , case files related to the investigation of the problem of evil / banking violations. Interviews .Conducted to determine what are the factors that encourage and influence the perpetrators to do so . Interviews will be conducted with the participants , whether they are in prison or who have completed their sentences. Data and Study Sample: Secondary data required is data on banking crime obtained from official institutions , namely the South Jakarta District Court , Central Jakarta District Court , to the Supreme Court premises Republic of Indonesia in Jakarta . This is because in the process of doing research guidance in the completion of a dissertation , the Promoter suggestions have been changes in other research methods , namely a multiple case study.

ANALYSIS

At this stage, researchers have not been able to conclude on the whole, but only to the extent the identification of bank fraud cases that have been decided by the Supreme Court. So it is still the case file analysis documents that the perpetrators banking crimes .They have broken the law, the banking law and code of ethics as has been enforced for the bankers. For his actions, then the perpetrator to be punished in accordance with the level of offense they have done.

CONCLUSION

Developments in the field of financial crime , particularly in the banking industry is still going on , especially in terms of quality . This dissertation research emphasis on ethics violations that can lead to a crime in banking. Banking crime in criminology included in the white collar crime , the perpetrator is a general characteristic of a highly educated , high social status . In the banking sector white collar crime , most perpetrators are men in the bank (banker) , with the victims were bank customers . Need for subsequent research , so that ethical issues in a variety of professions , especially bankers , further expanded .
